Is the foremost weekly agricultural journal in the world. The Homestead is edited and conducted by actual farmers who reside upon and operate their own farms. It has, in addition to able editorials on the vital agricultural problems of the day, departments devoted to horticulture, dairying, veterinary problems, sheep, poultry, legal problems of the farm, home and household and Sunday school, also interesting miscellaneous departments by special writers, current events and comments, field notes on the live stock industry, and contributions by leading farmers, stockmen and experiment station workers on living questions related to the farm. The Homestead is one of the oldest farm journals in the United States, having been established fifty-three years ago. It has a circulation of 100,000, and its popularity with the Iowa farmer is attested by the fact that it has more subscribers in Iowa alone than any other Des Moines agricultural weekly has in the states of the union combined.
